

Eric Ward is a Postdoc for the Marine Mammal Program. His research interests include population dynamics (particularly those of small populations), Bayesian statistics, model selection, and analysis of capture-recapture data. He is currently investigating several features of killer whale population dynamics, including changes in fecundity with age, the evolution of post-reproductive lifespan in females, and what effect anthropogenic factors may have on killer whale survival.